November 2016 Election Post-Mortem and Beyond

The recent election was historic. Los Angeles voted in favor of a transportation tax and for spending to help fight homelessness. California voted to legalize marijuana and Donald Trump is President-elect.

Join us for a discussion about what the results may mean for local, state and national politics.

Hear from two distinguished experts in the field about the impact of demographics, partisanship and turnout on the elections and how it will impact future elections.

Special Guests: Dan Schnur is the Director of the Jesse Unruh Center for Politics at USC, former head of the California FPPC, and was Communications Director for McCain for President 2000 and Governor Pete Wilson.

Christina Bellantoni is Assistant Managing Editor for Politics at the Los Angeles Times. Prior to the Times, she was the Editor in Chief at Roll Call, and Political Editor at The PBS NewsHour.
